Why this list?

We created this list because we needed some abandonment statistics ourselves for the introduction chapter to our E-Commerce Checkout Usability study.

When searching for these statistics we found a myriad of articles citing the same sources, as well as large fluctuations in the actual abandonment rates. So to save you the hassle we decided to gather all statistics in one place.

We've also calculated an average so it's easy to cite just one number instead of 28 different ones.

Know of any cart abandonment statistics not on this list? Then send an email to christian@baymard.com.

mobile input types

Virtual keyboards are awesome. Use them.

One of the easiest, cheapest, fastest and most effective ways of improving your mobile experience is using the right input type. It will save the user dozens of annoying taps and all you need to do is strike a few keys.

It's not going to transform a terrible mobile experience but it could make the difference between a good and awesome one. There are dozens of input types, have a scroll down to discover when you should and shouldn't be using them.

 Tweet 252

Email

Entering an email on the standard keyboard is a pain in the butt. This awesome keyboard adds the @ sign as well as the .com and other handy buttons to just make entering an email address as easy as possible.

<input type="email">

@jzwoo

Tel

If ever there were a most underused input type this would be it. Tel offers the user a numeric keypad. If all you want from the user is a number you should be using the tel input type. Forget using number, because that actually includes a bunch of stuff which isn't numbers.

<input type="tel">

@jzwoo

After a bit of research with an iOS8 browser and Chrome emulation I figured it out partially. I know of some solutions, but I don't know for sure if there are other ways to do it. You'll have to thank Apple for the amazing lack of documentation around this.
